

How to Get Your Project Reviewed Quickly

1. Provide the proponent's valid postal mailing address, including business name. Agency personnel assisting the public should use the proponent's name and contact information, not the state agency. The program will mail the consultation results letter to the address provided.
2. Provide complete information about the project location and extent, including:
 - all roads
 - any associated and foreseeable future development
 - the complete project footprint, not just portions on federal or state land
3. Provide a complete project description. Upload additional project narrative files describing:
 - when the development / activity begins (Mo/Yr)
 - when the development / activity ends (Mo/Yr)
 - the expected life of the development / project (i.e. permanent, temporary, number of years)
 - details about the type of surface disturbance proposed and the type of activity associated with the project
 - the estimated size of the surface disturbance associated with the development / activity (i.e. number of acres or miles; width of surface disturbance for linear features like roads or pipelines)
 - whether the surface disturbance will be wholly or partially within existing disturbed areas or rights-of-way.
4. Provide information about mitigation, including:
 - proactive measures taken to avoid and minimize impacts to sage grouse or sagebrush habitats
 - whether reclamation is proposed and the details if so.
